Upton aide 'shocked' by HuffPo piece

E&C committee director said there was no talk, let alone threats

By LOUISE WREGE
HP Staff Writer

U.S. Rep. Fred Upton and his campaign team are in shock over false statements made Monday in The Huffington Post, which reported that he and one of his top aides called and threatened Silicon Valley executives who donated to a super PAC supporting his opponent.

The Huffington Post corrected the story Wednesday, but Upton's camp said the damage has been done.

"This has been outrageous. ... The original story in the Huffington Post was completely erroneous," said Gary Andres, the aide accused of making the angry calls.

Andres is staff director of the Energy and Commerce Committee, which Upton chairs.

"I have not made any calls to any CEOs. I have not made any calls to any donors." Andres said.

The MayDay PAC is a crowd-funded super PAC, which says it wants to change how political campaigns are financed by getting the right people elected. The PAC is backing eight candidates that it says support campaign finance reform, including Upton's opponent, Democrat Paul Clements of Kalamazoo.

Upton and Clements face each other Nov. 4 in Michigan's 6th District race.

The Huffington Post updated its article Wednesday, now saying that Andres was "sending a signal that the chairman feels like the effort against him is uncalled for."

Even that correction is wrong, Andres said.

He said he was baffled when the MayDay PAC first targeted Upton about two weeks ago. He said the MayDay PAC is pro-immigration, pro-bipartisan and pro-campaign finance reform, which are all things Upton supports.

"Why would they spend $1.5 million against Upton? It seems like there's a lot of other people who would fall into those categories," Andres said in a phone interview Friday. "It makes no sense."

Andres said what actually happened is that he called a friend, who is a tech industry lobbyist, to try to get some insight into why Upton was being targeted. He said that lobbyist apparently sent an email to Silicon Valley executives.

"I was shocked that that even happened," he said.

Andres said he didn't ask his friend to contact anyone and has never seen the email. He said he learned about the email from the Huffington Post reporter.

"What I still can't figure out is how you get from a call to a lobbyist to me calling Silicon Valley CEOs or donors. It's just not true," he said.

The claim in the Huffington Post that Upton called the donors is also false, said Tom Wilbur, his campaign manager.

In a videotaped talk with the Kalamazoo Gazette editorial board, Upton said he talked with people who had donated to the PAC who now regret it. Wilbur said Upton didn't call the donor. He said it was one of the donors who called Upton, a claim verified Friday by a top adviser to the donor.

The adviser said his boss didn't know that Upton was going to be targeted when

A Nov. 4 election victory would represent a homecoming of sorts for Tonya Schuitmaker, seeking re-election to the state Senate.

The Lawton Republican faces Lawton Democrat Jim Walters in the newly carved 26th District. It covers Van Buren and Allegan counties and includes Gaines Township in Kent County.

Schuitmaker now serves Kalamazoo County and a fragment of Van Buren.

Schuitmaker represented Van Buren for six years as a state representative.

"In a sense, I'm just going back to my old House seat, said Schuitmaker, 46, the daughter of longtime Van Buren GOP leader Herbert Schuitmaker.

Expert addresses environmental impact on health

Seeking answers to child mortality

By DEBRA HAIGHT
HP Correspondent

BUCHANAN — Scientists are still short on answers when it comes to child mortality.

But environment is proving big player, an expert told an audience Thursday at the Fernwood Botanical Garden near Buchanan.

"Disentangling the causes of the disparities between different groups is critical to the overall health of people in our society," said Marie Miranda, dean of the University of Michigan School of Natural Resources and Environment. "We need to at least get it right at the beginning of life. We do know that environmental exposure contributes to poor outcomes."

Her talk was titled "Of Mice and Moms: Understanding How the Environment Affects Human Health," Fernwood and the League of Women Voters of Berrien and Cass Counties sponsored the event.

MIRANDA

Miranda has studied child mortality and its environmental, genetic and social factors for several years, first at Duke University and then last two years at U-M.

"We thought that if we could just get everyone prenatal care, the differences between different groups would disappear, and it didn't," she said. "Mapping the human genome gets us some answers but not the answer as to why we see disparities."

She said researchers are gaining ground by studying the combination of social and environmental stressors with genetic factors.

"It's not just about being poor. If it was, Hispanic and blacks would have similar outcomes," she said. "That's not the case, and we also know that recent immigrants have better outcomes in terms of infant mortality than those who have been here longer."

Miranda said areas where researchers are making a difference is in government standards for lead in homes, and in air, ground and water pollution.

She said there are new advances in studying the link between environment and autism.

"Eight years ago, we pitched the idea to the National Institutes of Health to take disease registries and information about where families lived," she said. "On October 1, we signed the contract to do the study to take the autism database and turn it into a spatially referenced database looking at the environment and other factors."

She said more study is needed to see how genetics, diet and environment factor in determining infant mortality.

She said no state or section of the country met the desired pre-term birth rate levels as of the 2010 census, though non-hispanic whites had better rates than Hispanics, who had better rates than black people.

Miranda has gathered information about premature births and infant mortality in conjunction with information about air pollution, genetics and social stress, using data from humans and mice. With mice, the experiments would expose them to different levels of pollutants. Researchers created stress by taking away mice nesting material.

The results showed that exposure to air pollution, prenatal and postnatal, was bad and stress made it worse. In humans, they found that the closer women lived to high-traffic roads, the greater the risk of their babies having low birth weight.

Pagel v. 'place holder'

State rep faces less-than-token opposition in 78th

2014 ELECTION 78TH DISTRICT STATE HOUSE PREVIEW

By DEBRA HAIGHT
HP Correspondent

BERRIEN SPRINGS — State Rep. Dave Pagel, R-Oronoko Township, appears a shoo-in for a second term representing the 78th District.

His Democratic opponent, Cartier Shields of Niles, is not running an active campaign. In a terse phone conversation, Shields told The Herald-Palladium he is not campaigning or giving interviews. He said he agreed to have his name on the ballot as a "place holder" for the Democratic Party.

The Democrat who originally sought to face Pagel had some blunt words for the Democratic Party. William Crandell of Baroda announced in summer 2013 he was running for the 78th district seat.

"I had some personal issues that impelled me to step aside, but I feel that I had an excellent staff and we could have given it a good run," he said. "But unfortunately no one believes that the 78th can be won by a Democrat.

PAGEL

"I found that the unions and many members of the Democratic Party felt that they would be wasting resources if they helped me. They say the 78th is a dead district. I disagreed, and in the end I probably would have lost because all the support gets pumped into the 79th."

The 78th covers southern

NY, NJ order Ebola quarantine for doctors, others

By MARILYNN MARCHIONE and MIKE STOBBE
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Alarmed by the case of an Ebola-infected New York doctor, the governors of New Jersey and New York on Friday ordered a mandatory, 21-day quarantine of all medical workers and other arriving airline passengers who have had contact with victims of the deadly disease in West Africa.

The move came after a physician who returned to New York City a week ago from treating Ebola patients in Guinea fell ill with the virus. Many New Yorkers were dismayed to learn that in the days after he came home, Dr. Craig Spencer rode the subway, took a cab, went bowling, visited a coffee shop and ate at a restaurant in the city of 8 million.

New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie and New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo said the case led them to conclude that the two states need precautions more rigorous than those of the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, which recommends monitoring of exposed people for 21 days but doesn't require quarantine, in which they are kept away from others.

"It's too serious a situation to leave it to the honor system of compliance," Cuomo said.

Those who are forcibly quarantined will be confined either to their homes or, if they live in other states, to some other place, most likely a medical facility, the governors said. Those quarantined at home will receive house calls from health officials. Twenty-one days is the incubation period for the Ebola virus.

Dr. Howard Zucker, acting New York state health commissioner, said any medical personnel who have treated Ebola patients in the three Ebola-ravaged West African countries – Sierra Leone, Guinea and Liberia – will be automatically quarantined.

Cuomo said anyone arriving from the three countries will be questioned at the airport about their contact with Ebola sufferers.

The governors gave no estimate of how many travelers would be subject to quarantine, but Cuomo said "we're not talking about a tremendous volume of people coming in from these areas," and added that there are no plans to hire more screeners at airports.

The two states are home to Kennedy Airport and Newark Liberty in New Jersey, both major international portals.

Spencer, a 33-year-old emergency room doctor, returned to the U.S. on Oct. 17 and sought treatment Thursday after suffering diarrhea and a 100.3-degree fever. He was listed in stable condition at a special isolation unit at Bellevue Hospital Center, and a decontamination company was sent to his Harlem home. His fiancee, who was not showing symptoms, was being watched in a quarantine ward at Bellevue.

Spencer's illness led lawmakers on Capitol Hill, scientists and ordinary New Yorkers to wonder why he was out on the town after his return – and why stronger steps weren't being taken to quarantine medical workers.

Richard Drew / AP

A worker from BioRecoveryCorp carries barrels into the apartment building of Ebola patient Dr. Craig Spencer in New York on Friday. Spencer remained in stable condition while isolated in a hospital, talking by cellphone to his family and assisting disease detectives who are accounting for his every movement since arriving in New York from Guinea via Europe last week.

Health officials said that he followed U.S. and international guidelines in checking his temperature every day and watching for symptoms, and that he put no one at risk. But others said he should have been quarantined, either voluntarily or by the government, during the incubation period.

An automatic three-week quarantine makes sense for anyone "with a clear exposure" to Ebola, said Dr. Richard Wenzel, a Virginia Commonwealth University scientist who formerly led the International Society for Infectious Diseases.

Aid organizations such as Doctors Without Borders, the group Spencer was working for, have argued that mandatory quarantines are unnecessary because people with Ebola aren't contagious until symptoms begin, and even then it requires close contact with body fluids.

Also, aid groups have warned that many health care volunteers wouldn't go to Ebola hot zones if they knew they would be confined to their homes for three weeks after they got back.

"A three-week complete quarantine would eliminate two-thirds to three-quarters of the volunteers from the U.S." going to West Africa, said Dr. Rick Sacra, a Massachusetts physician who was recently infected in Liberia but recovered. "They wouldn't be able to spare the time."

Program allows people to dispute tickets online

By JO MATHIS
Detroit Legal News

DETROIT — If you've ever spent an entire morning sitting in a packed courtroom to negotiate an outstanding parking or traffic ticket, you'll appreciate a new system intended to nudge the courts closer to modern times.

The Online Court Project, funded by the University of Michigan and developed by Court Innovations Inc., allows citizens who've received minor civil infractions or traffic tickets to seek reduced charges or other solutions to their problems online, according to the Detroit Legal News.

The program is currently being piloted in Washtenaw County 14-A1 District Court, which covers Pittsfield Township. Eligible individuals simply go to the Court Innovations' website at www.courtinnovations.com/14A1/traffic14A1/index, type in the information, and wait for the prosecutor and court decision-makers at the other end to examine their driving record and make a decision.

"The goal is to make the whole process easier for everybody on both sides, and at the same time, ensure that people are able to access the courts if they have concerns," said Michigan Law Professor J.J. Prescott, who led the team that designed the new system. "That's what courts are there for – to resolve disputes while at the same time making sure that people get a fair opportunity to have their concerns addressed."

Mathis / Detroit Legal News / AP

Washtenaw County 14-A1 District Court Magistrate A. Thomas Truesdell sits at the online mediation site earlier this month to either reject of accept a litigant's request for a reduced charge.

In-person meetings with a judge or magistrate are not only time-consuming, intimidating, and confusing – they're often unnecessary, and requiring them can be counterproductive, if people decide not to use the courts as a result, Prescott said. And while litigants can already pay fines online, those with concerns about their case must go to court and face a tedious process that involves travel, parking and taking time off work.

"We're providing a platform that allows litigants and decision-makers to negotiate in a very efficient and effective way. For many minor court issues, a face-to-face meeting with a judge or prosecutor simply doesn't improve the outcome for either side. Just as ATM machines allow you to skip seeing a bank teller during business hours, technology can help streamline and improve much of what courts do," said Prescott.

At 14-A District Court, Magistrate A. Thomas Truesdell approves or denies the litigants' requests after the Pittsfield Township police do the same. Truesdell, who says he typically follows the recommendation of police, is a big fan of the new Online Court Project, which has been in place for six months now.

The bottom-line goal, he said, is to reduce some of the tickets down to "impeding traffic," which adds no points and therefore, does not cause an increase in car insurance.

"We were doing this by having an officer – an officer, not the one who wrote the ticket – come out to the court on several different tickets and see if they'd reduce it down to impeding traffic," he said. "But of course, you're still paying for one officer to come out, and you're still paying for court time."

He said the idea to allow an electronic pre-hearing conference makes sense.

"It's a win-win for everybody because number one, with the way budgets are these days, the police do not have to show up, which means they can do it from their office if they have to do anything," he said. "It eliminates the court time which means we don't have to put that on our docket. And it also frees up time for the magistrate, of course. It also has a convenient factor for the defendant."

The ease of paying the fee online is another advantage for both the defendant and court, he said.

Tickets for traffic crashes will not be reduced because they affect other parties.

The three charges that are eligible – and in the vast majority of cases are granted a reduction to "impeding traffic" – are speeding, disobeying a traffic control device, and failure to stop at a stop sign. The project is funded by the University of Michigan's Third Century Initiative grant program. The grant is being used primarily to develop the software and implement pilots, with the hope of bringing the service to courts throughout Michigan and beyond. Over the two-year grant period, the use of the scalable software will transition away from a pilot implementation and be supported by courts and stakeholders.

Michigan ends assistance for 810 lottery winners

LANSING (AP) — More than 7,200 people who won at least $1,000 in the Michigan Lottery last year were living in households that received public assistance, according to a state report.

The Michigan Department of Human Services released the report Thursday that shows the state closed only about 11 percent of those cases, MLive.com reported. The state's "lottery match report" analyzes the impact of a 2012 law allowing the agency to cross-check lottery winnings with public assistance and end benefits in certain cases.

Residents in households receiving food stamps, Medicaid or some other form of assistance won nearly $44 million in 2013. That's roughly $6,000 per case. Eighteen cases involved jackpots of $100,000 or more.

State and federal laws allowed the department to close 810 of the 7,216 cases, including one lotto player who won more than $4 million.

"These winnings add up," said Maura Corrigan, director of DHS. "While federal regulations prevent us from being able to discontinue certain types of benefits, we were able to close food assistance and Medicaid benefits for 810 recipients, saving taxpayers nearly $2 million."

There are at least four bills waiting to pass through the Legislature that would stop lotto winners from being able to continue collecting public assistance, according to the report. Federal policy changes also would make it easier for the state to close those types of cases, Corrigan said.

"It does not sit well with taxpayers when someone who has won millions of dollars continues to collect assistance because of federal loopholes that do not count these winnings as assets," she said.

A series of similar cases, including a Bay City man who won $2 million in a lotto game and continued to receive food assistance, inspired the state to pass the law that restricts benefits for lottery winners.

Cook completes shortest outage in history

BRIDGMAN — Cook Nuclear Plant's Unit 1 reactor returned to service at 7:59 a.m. Friday, completing the shortest refueling outage in the plant's 40-year history.

Indiana Michigan Power said in a news release the 30-day, eight-hour refueling shutdown beat the previous record of 31 days, 17 hours, set in 2005. There were no recordable injuries reported by the more than 4,000 people who worked at various times during the outage, I&M said.

"This is a significant accomplishment for the Cook team," said Larry Weber, senior vice president and chief nuclear officer. "The combination of shorter refueling outages and Cook's very reliable past operation strengthens our position in the industry and demonstrates the benefits we provide to our customers and shareholders. I'm also extremely proud of our Cook personnel and craft workers for their outstanding safety performance."

Cook Unit 1 is now also fully compliant with all upgrades and modifications required by the Nuclear Regulatory Commission as a result of the Fukushima nuclear accident in Japan. It is one of the first nuclear units in the country to complete all that work, I&M said.

The NRC required that U.S. facilities install additional instruments to monitor used fuel storage pools and develop strategies to prevent damage from the loss of all onsite and offsite power. The new equipment ranges from diesel-driven pumps and electric generators to ventilation fans, hoses, fittings, cables and communications gear.

Cook has a new earthquake- and tornado-proof building on site to house the backup equipment. There is another layer of backup equipment at national response centers in Memphis and Phoenix that can be deployed within 24 hours.

Prior to the outage, the unit set a record for a capacity factor of 101.4 percent, beating the previous record of 101.3 percent, which was set in the previous fuel cycle. Plant spokesman Bill Schalk said it is possible to run greater than 100 percent capacity by gaining efficiencies through lower than normal lake water temperatures.

The unit ran for 493 consecutive days, the second longest run ever. Running continuously between refueling outages is known in the industry as a breaker-to-breaker run as the unit's output circuit breakers remained connected to the transmission grid for the entire 18-month fuel cycle.

BH Street Ministries stays open with renewed vigor

By LOUISE WREGE
HP Staff Writer

BENTON HARBOR — Benton Harbor Street Ministries is alive and well with renewed energy and commitment, Executive Director Yvonne Hester said.

"We're back on track," she said. "I'm happy we're having another opportunity to upgrade and look for resources for our program."

In August, the picture wasn't so rosy. The Berrien County Association of Churches, which runs the street ministries, was then talking about cutting programs and possibly closing it.

"The problem was that no fundraising had taken place for the past three years," Hester said.

Part of the ministry's new life came during the church association's annual meeting Oct. 13, when it elected James F.A. Turner as its new president.

"What we need to do right now is to stabilize the street ministries financially and otherwise," Turner said.

He said the church association has 350 church members, but only about 50 are active in supporting the street ministries.

"I would like to include all 350 churches," he said. "The street ministries is one of the entities that has been the focus."

Hester said a petition signed by community residents who use the ministries helped to save it. She said the ministries also received a large donation from St. Peter's Church in St. Joseph.

"I know God's hand had to be in it for it to stay open," she said.

One of the first fundraisers will be Nov. 22. Hester said the Walk for Warmth walk-a-thon will start at 9 a.m. Nov. 22 at the Orchards Mall, 1800 Pipestone Road. For information, contact Jim McConnell at jemcconnell@hotmail.com or call the street ministries at 925-4333.

She said the street ministries offers a variety of services, including adult education, a food pantry, an after-school feeding program and activities for children, winter coats and Christmas meals.

On Wednesday, several children talked about how important the street ministries is to them.

"I like spending time with Ms. Hester. We go on field trips and help clean up," said Jumarciyae James, 11, of Benton Harbor. "This is a special place for me."

"It's a place I can come to have fun," said Wardell James, 12, of Benton Harbor. "Ms. Hester is kind of like our grandma."

Twanya'e Johnson, 13, of Benton Harbor said he likes tutoring some of the younger children.

"I'd be at home if I wasn't here," he said. "It's always safe here."

Crowded ballot for Coloma school board

Three incumbents, three challengers chase three seats

By ANDREW LERSTEN
HP Staff Writer

COLOMA — Six people are vying for three four-year Coloma school board terms.

Board President Doug LeClear, Secretary Heidi Ishmael and Trustee Dave Vollrath face re-election challenges from Nate Clements, Kelly Kniebes and Julia Smith.

Meanwhile, Trustee Doug Kraemer is unopposed in seeking the partial, two-year term.

Clements, 29, is employed as a trade customer support worker for the Whirlpool Corp. He serves on the regional Fire Board. He and his wife, Kelly, live at 232 Apple St.

"I would just like to be involved more with the area," Clements said. "I grew up here. I'm familiar with the area. I take a lot of pride in it. I want to make sure that money is well spent. I feel I can make some good educational decisions."

Kniebes, 27, recently married Nate Clements and changed her last name to Clements — but her maiden name is on the ballot. She is a sales and marketing consultant for Technekes of North Carolina. She is a 2005 Coloma High School graduate and lives at 232 Apple St.

"I come from a family of teachers," she said. "I just want to get involved and make some changes. I'm a very good listener. I'm a go-getter, with a marketing and business background."

Ishmael, 41, has been on the board for six years and is now its secretary. She is a 1991 Coloma High School graduate, and is an account manager with Capital Solutions in St. Joseph. She and her husband, Tim, have two sons and live at 5582 Johnson Road.

"I feel we have untapped potential in our district. The first six years (on the board) I learned a lot. I've grown a lot and I'd like to continue and help this district move in a positive direction."

Argument, standoff leads to sentence

Berrien commissioner's brother pleads guilty to charge

By DEBRA HAIGHT
HP Correspondent

NILES — The brother of Berrien County Commissioner McKinley "Mac" Elliott was sentenced Friday in Berrien County Trial Court on a weapons charge. The charge stems from an early July incident in Buchanan between the two brothers.

Lawrence Raymond Elliott, 65, of Terre Coupe in Buchanan was sentenced by Cass District Court Judge Stacey Rentfrow as all Berrien County judges had recused themselves from hearing the case. Rentfrow placed Elliott on two years' probation, gave him credit for 89 days served and ordered him to pay $800 in fines and costs.

Rentfrow recommended Elliott to the Berrien County mental health court. She said she would order 80 more days in jail if Elliott violates probation terms. She continued a no-contact order between Elliott, his brother and his brother's family.

"Part of my job is to punish you and also for protection of society," she told Elliott. "If you're angry or upset, there are things you can do besides taking a weapon from your brother's home. ... My hope is that you haven't enjoyed your time in jail and don't want to go back."

Defense attorney Shannon Sible said Elliott was more suicidal than wanting to harm anyone else. He said Elliott only learned there was a warrant for his arrest this summer when he saw the information in the "Southwest Michigan Most Wanted" listing in The Herald-Palladium. He turned himself in the next day, Sible said.

Elliott said he regretted any distress the incident caused and hopes to resume counseling sessions at Riverwood.

The incident occurred July 6 at Mac Elliott's house in Buchanan. After an argument between the two brothers, Lawrence Elliott entered his brother's home and stole a Remington 12-guage shotgun. When police were called, he would not come out and threatened to kill himself. He was taken into custody after the Berrien County tactical response unit was called.

The original charges against Elliott in this incident were first-degree home invasion and possession of a firearm by a felon. He was convicted of forgery of license documents on June 6, 2013.

Bangor to suck leaves

Council overrides staff move to save money

By BECKY KARK
For the Herald-Palladium

BANGOR — It looks like Bangor will offer curbside leaf vacuuming and fall trash pickup after all.

Council members this week overrode staff recommendations to halt the two services this year due to budget concerns.

Instead, council members voted to repair the city's leaf vacuum truck at a cost of less than $4,000, and to offer a fall trash cleanup day where citizens can put unwanted household refuse at the curb on designated days.

Council members made their decision based partly on citizen input, but also because they questioned the reasoning behind not repairing the leaf vacuum this year.

Two weeks ago, City Manager Ryan Fellows and Mark Duel of Perceptive Control Inc., which oversees the city's Department of Public Works, stated it would be cheaper to offer one designated area for disposal of unwanted household goods. Furthermore, they said, maintaining the city's aging snow plows are more important than fixing the leaf vacuum truck.

But some council members questioned the $6,000 estimate made two weeks ago for fixing the vacuum truck. They questioned a recommendation Fellows made Monday that the city spend $4,000 to rent a leaf vacuum truck for this year.

Councilman Lucas Koenig argued that a quote to fix the city's truck for $3,200 made more sense.

"The reason I want to see the leaf vac fixed is people can live with an inconvenience if it can't be fixed this year, but they don't want to lose it," Koenig said.

Koenig and other council members instructed city staff to obtain several more quotes for repairing the vac and making sure it is operational in November.

Fellows said after the meeting he made the suggestion to rent a truck because there is not enough money in the city's motor equipment fund to repair the truck and maintain snow plows. As a result, the council will pay for vac truck repairs from another budget, and that will require a budget amendment, which will take place at the next council meeting.

"Somewhere down the road we're going to run out of these magic tricks of taking money from other places," he said.

Tentative dates for leaf vac pickup are the weeks of Nov. 3-7 and Nov. 17-21. Leaves in biodegradable bags will be picked up at other times. A date for the annual fall trash pickup has not yet been set.

Working with beautiful brown

Mary Carol Garrity
Style at Home

The world looks fabulous wrapped in the colors of fall. And at the base of this beautiful bouquet of radiant color is brown. Earthy, warm, soothing and satisfying, the color brown encourages us to slow down and snuggle in. And eat hot, buttery popcorn. Or, is that just me? I digress. Here are my favorite ways to work this dramatic but undemanding neutral into your home decor.

■ Pair brown with lighter, brighter colors

A few years ago, brown was the bomb. So much so that we saw people going overboard with this dramatic neutral. Folks were washing their homes from ceiling to floor in brown, with brown walls, brown furniture, brown artwork and more.

It didn't take much to make the Brown Houses, as we began to call them, more visually appealing. The trick? Pair brown with lighter, brighter colors. We created a palette that is perfect for a living room, dining room or bedding ensemble using fabrics featuring browns, creams and pops of warm reds. Switch the red for navy and you have the same stately look.

Brown also looks great mixed with brighter, bolder accent colors. In a mix of fabrics, we added in a liberal amount of cream, then threaded in a bit of sage and celadon. I also love turquoise, apple green, fuchsia (any pink, actually), orange and yellow with brown.

Earthy, warm, soothing and satisfying, the color brown encourages us to slow down and snuggle in.

■ Bring brown alive through pattern

The secret to keeping a focused palette interesting and alive is to swirl the colors together with lots of different patterns. The mix of patterns in the furnishings is the key to success.

■ Use brown to spotlight lighter accents and artwork

Great artwork can get lost on a light wall if you are not careful. But when you hang lighter pieces against a moody, dark canvass of brown, holy smokes! It pops! The walls in a gallery at Nell Hill's are painted Molasses, one of my Mary Carol Artisan Paint colors. This is one of our most popular paint colors, and for good reason.

My friend Cynthia painted her dining room walls Molasses and the wood trim Garrity Cream. The light cream trim keeps the dark walls from feeling heavy or dull. And, wow, does it look great with her casual dining room furnishings. The brown is content to recede into the background and let the individual elements in the room shine.

■ Add brown to make spaces soothing

Warm and wonderful, brown pillows on a comfy cream sofa look ready for your Sunday nap.

My top 10 list of decorating faves? A pair of brown leather wingback chairs flanking a fireplace. Be still my beating heart! The light stone fireplace surrounds, and blue walls and plump plaid pillows keep the chairs from feeling too dark. All this serene setting needs is you, a cup of tea and a good book.

■ Pair brown with earthy accents

The color of bark and soil and fall leaves, brown is a natural when paired with earthy accents. My friend Jean made her covered porch an ode to nature's rugged side by furnishing her space in brown wicker chairs and irresistible textiles in a mix of browns.

A rustic wood table is a perfect celebration of brown in all its many shades and finishes.

Choosing the right generator for your home

By DIANA MARSZALEK
Associated Press

As storms have become more severe in many parts of the country and power outages more frequent, home generators have gone from luxury items to mainstream ones.

Prices have come down, thanks to growing demand and cheaper technology. But the idea of buying and installing one can still be daunting, mainly because there are so many variables to consider. Much depends on how much you want the generator to do.

A look at some generator basics:

Built-in or portable

The biggest question is whether to buy a built-in generator, which has to be professionally installed and runs on natural gas, or a portable unit, which is cheaper and runs on gasoline. The built-in kicks in automatically in a power outage; the portable has to be started manually.

Built-in generators look similar to air conditioners, usually sitting on the side of a house. They are more expensive than portables; installation could run $1,500-plus.

But they have one big advantage, says Ken Collier, editor-in-chief at The Family Handyman: Once a built-in generator is put in place, you don't have to touch it again.

"They are a great choice for people for whom spending a few thousand bucks for the security of having power is worth it," Collier says.

Portable generators, on the other hand, can be powerful enough to do the trick. But they have to be started manually, and you must have gasoline on hand before any storm. You can't have the gasoline so long that it becomes unusable: Collier says gasoline goes stale after about a month.

In addition, turning on a portable generator often requires several steps, which isn't necessarily easy in stormy, dark conditions.

There are safety concerns, too. Because they are powered by gasoline, portable generators emit carbon monoxide, so they must be set up away from the home and windows.

Generac photo

A Guardian Series built-in generator available for homeowners. Although built-ins are more expensive and require professional installation, they turn on automatically in power outages. Portables are powered by gasoline and need to be manually started.

How much power

Once you've decided what kind of generator to get, you need to determine how powerful it should be. Do you want to just keep the fridge and a few lights running, for instance, or do you want to light up the whole house?

Russ Minick, vice president of the country's largest home-generator manufacturer, Generac, recommends buying a generator with at least 5,000 watts, which he says is the minimum needed to power just a refrigerator and lights. Running air conditioning or heat requires more powerful units, he says. Generac has a sizing calculator on its website, generac.com, to help people decide how powerful a unit they want.

The bigger picture

Of course, buying a generator is just one piece of being ready for a power outage, Collier notes. Gassing up your car is crucial in storm preparedness, since it can provide everything from heat and a radio to a place to charge your phone when power goes out.

Having "modern" flashlights – ones with LED lights and lithium batteries – is another priority, Collier says. They use little energy and are powered by batteries that last for years.

"Preparedness is very much a personal philosophy, and spending hundreds or even thousands of dollars being ready is very much a personal decision," Collier says.

Even people who own generators can't let their guard down, he says.

"Generators are not just something that allows you to push a button and be back in business," Collier says. "You have to take care of them. You have to understand what you have to do with the power and what not to do."

Lessons from Thomas Jefferson's Monticello

Joe Lamp'l
The Gardener Within

After five years of traveling the country for the television show I currently host and produce ("Growing a Greener World" on national public television), we have been to some incredible and beautiful places. One that continues to hold a spot on my list of favorites is Thomas Jefferson's Monticello, located just outside Charlottesville, Va.

We've been back twice now, something very rare for us. But beyond the historical significance, the lessons learned from Jefferson as one of the world's great organic gardeners and plantsmen are still relevant today and well worth revisiting.

Jefferson was one of the first to make the connection between healthy soil and healthy plants. Gardens are living systems. A healthy garden starts from the ground up. While there are many lessons we can learn from Jefferson's gardening techniques, one of the principles central to the success of his garden was the focus on soil health and fertility. He did that by regular additions of organic matter.

Think of soil rich in organic matter as a savings account for your plants. The nutrients you deposit are released back to your plants much like a steady income. Regular additions are necessary to meet the demand. Nutrients that are found in organic matter stay in the soil longer than today's water-soluble synthetics, which rapidly leach well beyond the root zone.

Jefferson believed in adding soil-building components such as compost, manure and decomposing leaves to his soil because he noticed the plants flourished in that environment, suffered from fewer pests and diseases and were more drought-resistant. Today we know organic matter promotes healthy biological activity within the soil – a complex web of life ranging from microbes to earthworms to soil-dwelling insects.

Jefferson's 5,000-acre plantation served not only as his food supply, but also as a living laboratory. His 1,000-foot long kitchen garden is legendary for the variety and scope of its vegetable production. Sited on a sunny southern slope of Monticello, he grew plants from all over the world including interesting vegetables such as sea kale, cardoon, Caracalla beans, Florence fennel, fava beans and crowder peas.

Another valuable lesson from Jefferson's gardening practices is his attention to meticulous note-taking. He recorded his observations about everything in his garden, including when he sowed his crops and when they were harvested. He noted the condition of the crops, observed pests and diseases and recorded how he solved problems.

Jefferson was also willing to experiment with a great variety of plants. While he grew about 330 varieties of vegetables and 170 varieties of fruit, they weren't all successes. Jefferson was not afraid of failure. He believed that if one thing failed, it's replaced by the success of another. In fact, he embraced every failure as a learning opportunity – something we modern-day gardeners should appreciate as well.

In spite of the many challenges that Jefferson faced, he showed us that while some of our gardening endeavors may fail, others will flourish, as long as we persevere and continue to learn every step of the way.

What people are saying in Southwest Michigan

'Absolutely we are dissapointed, and we think a lot of other people are. People like debates. They like to see candidates answering questions in unrehearsed settings.'

– SUSAN GILBERT
Communications director for the League of Women Voters of Berrien and Cass Counties, after U.S. Rep. Fred Upton announced he isn't rescheduling a debate with opponent Paul Clements

'I would like for you all to actually take a walk through the building at 7:30 in the morning and see exactly how your staff is working and how they're securing our schools. It's a joke.'

– LISA GULLEY
Benton Harbor School Board trustee, to the City Commission after a student was caught with a gun at school. City police handle security at the high school

'There will be no weapons in our district. These are permanent expulsions from any school in the state of Michigan.'

– LEONARD SEAWOOD
Benton Harbor superintendent, saying the district is safe and is doing everything possible to prevent future such incidents

'That's why he's a nonpartisan dog.'

– LIZ GAREY
Fred Upton's campaign director, whose dog wore a sign saying "vote Nov. 4" during a doggie "bueaty pageant" and fundraiser

Brown, Walters will put people before party

Editor,

The citizens of Van Buren County have two elected people who never miss an opportunity to reward people, municipalities, schools and business with proclamations signed by the legislature or the governor. State Sen. Tonya Schuitmaker (20th District) and state Rep. Aric Nesbitt (66th District) do nice things in our county. However, when they get to Lansing everything changes.

Schuitmaker and Nesbitt, the ones who performed good in Van Buren County, choose to follow the orders of the American Legislative Exchange Council (ALEC), an organization working behind closed doors for laws that deny your rights as citizens. Schuitmaker was the ALEC leader in the Senate. She resigned because she was chastised by negative reaction to her legislation. Nesbitt is now the key representative for ALEC in the House. His activities are all harmful to the majority of citizens of Van Buren County. Indeed, he is the delegate for billionaires in the state House.

We finally have two citizens who will do what is best for Van Buren County. Annie Brown and Jim Walters are not beholding to any nefarious organizations. Brown has paid her dues for years of public service in South Haven. She knows what a small business can do for a community. Walters has been in a working world of creating jobs in real businesses. He really is a rocket scientist who worked on building rocket parts that still circle Earth. Folks, for the first time in history we have the chance to vote for people who will serve you! Their names are on the Democratic ballot. A vote for them is a vote for you.

Nesbitt has shown support for education

Editor,

As a parent, education is important to me. I want to know that my children have the opportunity to get a good education that will set them up for success. After reviewing what has been done over the past few years, I am happy to say that our state representative, Aric Nesbitt, has led and supported reforms that put our children first.

Since taking office, Nesbitt has fought to expand dual enrollment opportunities for high school students to get a head start of college and worked to provide more flexibility for students looking to take advantage of vocational education courses. He's also increased funding for education, despite the lies you may have heard coming from those backing his opponent. In fact, education spending is up $1 billion since Aric was elected.

After looking at the facts, if education is your issue, Aric Nesbitt is your candidate. I'll be supporting him on Nov. 4.

Brown is the right person at the right time

Editor,

I've been a friend of Annie Brown since forever, which isn't the reason I support her for state representative. I support her, and urge readers to support her, because she's going to be good at this. She's prepared for this. And her political views are right for this moment in Michigan's history.

Annie's on the right side of the education battle, of workers' rights, of issues that matter to us – those affecting retirees and children and families. She's politically savvy, aware and smart. The only thing she isn't is connected – except to the people who matter, people who live and work here.

Our friendship has taught me that Annie will stand up for what she thinks – yes, even if it means butting heads with her friends – and that's critical. Because it means she will stand up for us. So vote. Vote for Annie. She's exactly the state representative we need.

Smith has proven he has passion, great work ethic

Editor,

I am proud to support Stephen Smith as a candidate for Berrien County's next District Court judge. We in Berrien County are fortunate to have a native son as accomplished and as passionate to serve our community as Smith. From his education at Notre Dame and Georgetown Law to his 16 years of experience as an attorney in the nation's capital and back home in Berrien County, Smith has demonstrated the remarkable intelligence and skill for which he has been noted since growing up in Coloma and graduating from Lake Michigan Catholic High School.

Even more impressive, he has and continues to selflessly give of his time and talents to serve our community with organizations such as Lest We Forget, Lakeland Health Foundation, Emergency Shelter Services, Berrien County Land Bank Authority and St. Joseph-Benton Harbor Rotary Club.

Smith has the education, experience and dedication to serving the people of Berrien County that we need in our next District Court judge. I urge you to join me in voting for Stephen Smith on Nov. 4.

Nixon's Saturday Night Massacre

Bruce Kauffmann
History Lesson

Most people who shoot themselves in the foot only pull the trigger once, but Richard Nixon was not most people, and in October 1973 the pressures he faced as president were decidedly different from those of most presidents. He was, in fact, waist deep in the Watergate break-in scandal and the waters were rising.

Nixon's immediate problem that October was Archibald Cox, the Watergate special prosecutor Nixon himself had appointed, who was demanding that the president release tape recordings that he, Nixon, had made of his conversations in the Oval Office. Earlier in the year a White House aide revealed that Nixon secretly taped his Oval Office conversations, which meant that if Nixon had any involvement in, or knowledge of, the Watergate burglary and coverup, he almost certainly would have discussed it with aides and those discussions would be on the tapes.

Nixon refused to even consider Cox's request, prompting Cox to ask the judge overseeing the Watergate trial, John Sirica, to order Nixon to release the tapes, which Sirica did. The U.S. Court of Appeals then upheld Judge Sirica's ruling, but Nixon defied them all. He intended to go to the Supreme Court, if necessary, to protect his right to keep those tapes, which so infuriated Cox that he gave a very public speech assailing Nixon and demanding that the tapes be released.

It was at this point that Nixon, whose P.R. skills were so-so at best, thought to himself, "Wait a minute. I hired this guy. I can fire him." And so this week (Oct. 20) the president set about to do just that. He ordered his attorney general, Elliot Richardson, to fire Cox. Richardson, with a better take on what the public's reaction to that move would be, refused – and then resigned.

So Nixon ordered his deputy attorney general, William Ruckelshaus, to fire Cox. Ruckelshaus also refused – and also resigned.

Finally, late on Saturday night, Nixon got Robert Bork, the solicitor general (and later defeated Supreme Court nominee), to fire Cox.

Thus did the public wake up Sunday morning to find that two key members of the Nixon administration had resigned, and the Watergate special prosecutor had been fired. It was immediately dubbed "The Saturday Night Massacre," and it sent a clear message to the public: President Nixon was trying to obstruct the Watergate investigation.

And it was all for naught. Public pressure forced Nixon to appoint another special prosecutor, and when the Supreme Court did rule on the tapes it unanimously ruled that Nixon must release them.

Those tapes, of course, revealed "The Smoking Gun" – Nixon's full knowledge of the Watergate coverup – which shot him both in the foot, and, politically speaking, in the head.

Don't be fooled by Cruz's deceptive Expatriate Terrorist Act

Texas Republican Sen. Ted Cruz doesn't trust Barack Obama to protect Americans against Ebola, defeat the Islamic State, oversee the IRS or revamp the health insurance system. He decries the expansion of federal power Obama has brought about. But Cruz wants to give him another power by letting him decide that some Americans will no longer be Americans.

Steve Chapman

That's the implication of the senator's Expatriate Terrorist Act, which would let the government go to court to revoke the citizenship of anyone who joins or aids a foreign terrorist group that targets Americans. Cruz thinks this step is necessary to prevent citizens who leave to fight for the Islamic State from returning to carry out "unspeakable acts of terror here at home."

It's not necessary, in strict point of fact. Federal law already makes it a crime to murder Americans and to provide material assistance to terrorist organizations. So anyone who becomes a terrorist for the Islamic State can be arrested and prosecuted and incarcerated for a long time.

John Walker Lindh, who gained infamy as "the American Taliban," is doing a 20-year sentence for fighting alongside our enemies in Afghanistan. As it happens, he remains a U.S. citizen. More recently, Americans have been arrested while trying to leave the U.S. to fight with al-Qaida.

But letting the federal government deprive Americans of their nationality is something that should give pause to anyone acquainted with the Constitution or history. In the bitter aftermath of World War II, a California native named Iva Toguri D'Aquino, accused of being the notorious "Tokyo Rose," was convicted of treason for doing propaganda broadcasts for Japan, sentenced to 10 years in prison and stripped of her citizenship.

Her conviction, historian Edwin Reischauer wrote, was the product of a public "under the influence of traditional racial prejudices and far from free of the anti-Japanese hatreds of the recent war." In 1977, President Gerald Ford acknowledged the injustice by pardoning D'Aquino and restoring her citizenship.

Cruz, who clerked for Chief Justice William Rehnquist and has argued cases before the Supreme Court, is well-acquainted with the Constitution. So he is guilty of deception, not ignorance, when he approvingly quotes Hillary Clinton's statement that working with foreign terrorist groups can be punished in this way because "United States citizenship is a privilege. It is not a right."

Actually, it is a right, affirmed in the Fourteenth Amendment, which says, "All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and the states in which they reside." It does not say "unless..." The amendment provides no conditions under which a citizen may be deprived of citizenship.

In 1967, the Supreme Court barred the government from disinheriting one of its own for voting in an election in Israel. "We reject the idea," wrote Justice Hugo Black, that "Congress has any general power, express or implied, to take away an American citizen's citizenship without his assent."

Experts from across the political spectrum reject the legality of what Cruz wants to do. John Bellinger III, legal adviser for the National Security Council and the State Department under President George W. Bush, told me, "It would be very difficult under our Constitution to strip a U.S. national of citizenship; the government would have to show the U.S. national specifically intended to give up his citizenship."

University of Houston law professor Emily Berman, former counsel to the Brennan Center for Justice at New York University, concurs. "It is unconstitutional to take away an American's citizenship without her consent – citizenship may be voluntarily relinquished, but not unilaterally stripped by the federal government," she said.

Powers of this kind are susceptible to abuse. "Material support" for terrorist groups, the Supreme Court has said, can include those who engage in mere speech – even, notes the American Civil Liberties Union, "if their work is intended to promote peaceful, lawful objectives." Citizens wouldn't have to fire AK-47s to come under banishment.

As for those who do fire AK-47s, representatives of the U.S. government may kill them in Iraq or arrest them at a port of entry. Cruz's measure offers no additional deterrent or protection.

Giving additional power to the president is something to be done rarely, reluctantly and only when there is no good alternative. On any day he's not pushing the Expatriate Terrorist Act, Ted Cruz would tell you that.

FCC: Phone companies posted private info online

By ANNE FLAHERTY
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Two phone companies – TerraCom Inc. and Your Tel America Inc. – unwittingly posted the Social Security numbers, driver's licenses and other sensitive data of up to 300,000 clients to the Internet, an investigation found, and federal regulators said Friday they plan to fine the companies.

As consumer data breaches go, the case – and its $10 million fine – is relatively small. But the incident is alarming because of how it unfolded: The companies participate in a government program called Lifeline, which subsidizes phone service for poor consumers. To crack down on fraudulent claims, federal regulators ordered carriers to collect identifiable information.

TerraCom Inc. and YourTel America, which are jointly owned, complied, but were so careless with the files that a reporter stumbled upon them during a simple Google search, according to the Federal Communications Commission.

In a written statement released Friday, Dale Schmick, chief operating officer of TerraCom Inc. and YourTel America Inc., said the companies have since increased its data security efforts and completed "multiple security audits to prevent future breaches from taking place."

"When faced with this instance of unauthorized access, we fully complied with state laws regarding notification of affected consumers," Schmick wrote. "We look forward to working with the FCC to resolve this matter and welcome the opportunity to correct the record with regard to our security processes."

But according to FCC investigators, even after company officials learned that the information could be accessed online, they failed to notify all potentially affected consumers. This deprived consumers "of any opportunity to take steps to protect their personal information from misuse by Internet thieves," the FCC wrote in its announcement.

FCC officials said the companies were required to collect sensitive data from consumers to check their eligibility. But, the FCC says the companies should have destroyed the data as soon they verified that an applicant qualified for financial assistance. Instead, the data was stored in a format accessible to the Internet from September 2012 through April 2013.

Vito Capizzo

Vito Capizzo, 87, of Coloma passed away Oct. 23, 2014.

Mass of Christian Burial will be celebrated at 10 a.m. Monday, Oct. 27, 2014, at St. Joseph Catholic Church, 211 Church St., St Joseph. Burial will follow in North Shore Memory Gardens. Friends may visit with the family from 2-5 p.m. Sunday, Oct. 26, 2014, with a prayer service recited at 5 p.m., at Starks & Menchinger Chapel, 2650 Niles Road, St. Joseph. In lieu of flowers memorial contributions may be made to Lake Michigan Catholic Schools or Monsignor Sears Tuition Assistance Fund. Those wishing to sign Vito's memory book online may do so at www.starks-menchinger.com.

CAPIZZO

Originally from Chicago, Vito and his parents, Jasper and Frances Capizzo, and sister Lorraine, moved to Southwest Michigan when he was 16. Working hard to provide for his family, Jasper developed a successful farm, and Frances managed the household while working at the former VM Corp. Vito was a proud graduate of St. John's High School in 1946 before serving his country in the armed forces, stationed in Asia.

After his return from service, Vito was introduced to his wife, Rosalie, by Sal and Geri Crivellone. A lifelong romance and partnership bloomed, producing four lovely daughters: Ferol, Mary Donna, Vicki and Nancie. Following the work ethic set by his parents, Vito honed his skills in advertising and built his own agency, Creative Advertising Corp., from the ground up – a thriving small business in St. Joseph. During his Twin Cities business career, Vito was very involved in promoting area charities, including the United Way. For many years he helped design award-winning Blossomtime floats and organized events at the Grand Floral Ball. He was proud of his Italian heritage and was a longtime member of the Italian American Club of Chicago and local Sons of Italy.

Vito was a talented athlete, including time spent with a semi-pro football team. His love of football made him one of the area's most ardent Notre Dame football fans. His passion for the game extended to his family, who frequently joined him in South Bend to watch the game. Those who knew Vito best know that the most important focus of his life was always his family and friends. He always had time to support those in need and often helped them through challenging periods. For his family, he had always been the classic patriarch, spotting needs and offering support and solutions as his family grew. In later years, and in particular in the summers, no weekend was complete without a Saturday night gathering at Vito and Roe's Lake Michigan home surrounded by great food, Jerry Vale music, laughter and typically 20-plus members of his extended family and friends. He had a life well lived and well loved. He will be missed by many, but his legacy will be the caring examples he set for those family and friends.

Vito is survived by his wife, Rosalie, four daughters: Ferol (Douglas) Allen, Nancie (Paul) Oetter, Mary Donna Capizzo and Vicki (Mark) Matthews; and grandchildren: Michael (Michele) and Tom Matthews; Elizabeth, Kathryn and Michael Allen; and Jennifer and Teresa Oetter. He was preceded in death by his sister, Lorraine (Phil) McDonald, area residents; and is survived by their children: Kristi, Philip, Joey and Michael; and their granddaughter, Taylor.

Lottie Norris

Lottie Norris, 87, of Galien passed away Oct. 24, 2014.

Lottie was born Nov. 28, 1926, in Buchanan to Chester and Carrie Patton. She married Kenneth Orland Norris, who preceded her in death Jan. 20, 1984.

She is survived by her son, Ronald Norris of Buchanan; brothers: Chester Patton of Buchanan, Robert Patton of Niles and Donald Patton of Statesville, N.C.; seven grandchildren; 20 great-grandchildren; and four great-great-grandchildren.

Lottie was preceded in death by her husband, Kenneth Norris; parents, Chester and Carrie Patton; brother, Gerald Patton; sisters, Eva Rauch and Elnora Pastryk; and daughter; Sandra McKaskle.

There will be visitation for Lottie from 2-4 p.m. Monday, Oct. 27, 2014, and noon-1 p.m. Tuesday, Oct. 28, 2014, at Hoven Funeral Home in Buchanan, followed by a graveside service at Galien Cemetery.

In lieu of flowers, memorial contributions may be made to the family. Online condolences may be made at www.hovenfunerals.com

Comcast boosts lobbying effort with Washington hire

By BOB FERNANDEZ
The Philadelphia Inquirer

PHILADELPHIA — Boosting its lobbying muscle, Comcast Corp. has hired Washington insider Mitch Rose to head its NBCUniversal government affairs department, the cable company said Friday.

Rose, a former aide to the chairman of the powerful Senate Commerce Committee, will report directly to Comcast's David Cohen, who heads one of the most potent corporate lobbyist teams in Washington.

The new top-level lobbyist arrives as Comcast faces a tough regulatory review at the Federal Communications Commission and the Justice Department of its proposed $45.2 billion acquisition of Time Warner Cable Inc. and early discussions among lawmakers of the need to overhaul the nation's telecommunications laws. The last overhaul was in 1996.

Among the legislative issues in a potential overhaul are retransmission fees that TV stations charge cable operators to carry their programming, constantly rising pay-TV bills and Internet streaming.

Comcast acquired NCBUniversal, the entertainment and news giant that owns the NBC TV network and cable channels, in 2011.

"This is the busiest the FCC has been in years while simultaneously there is talk in Congress of revisiting the basic telecommunications laws of the country," said John Bergmayer, senior staff attorney for the nonprofit advocacy group Public Knowledge. "These are very important issues to Comcast and (Rose) has his work cut out for him."

Robert M. McDowell, a former FCC commissioner and now partner at the K Street law firm of Wiley Rein L.L.P., said yesterday that Rose, a Republican, could work with both Republicans and Democrats and "will be a formidable advocate for Comcast."

In another indication that Comcast has been strengthening its lobbying team, the cable-TV giant announced last month that it promoted five Washington staffers to vice presidents: Rudy N. Brioche, Lindsey Dickinson, David Don, Jordan Goldstein and Sam Lancaster.

The company says the promotions were disclosed internally in March.

Comcast's $18.8 million in expenditures on lobbying in 2013 was seventh-highest among all entities, according to the nonpartisan Center for Responsive Politics, The Philadelphia Inquirer reported earlier this year after Comcast announced its proposed acquisition of Time Warner Cable.

Rose fills the role at Comcast held by Meredith Atwell Baker, a former FCC commissioner. Baker left Comcast earlier this year to head the wireless trade association.

Like Baker, Rose is a Republican. He served as chief of staff for former Alaska Sen. Ted Stevens, chairman of the Commerce Committee that wields enormous influence over broadcast and cable-TV issues.

Stevens made it known that he wanted Rose to head the National Association of Broadcasters in 2005. Rose, then a lobbyist for the Walt Disney Co., was passed over.

Today in history

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Today is Saturday, Oct. 25, the 298th day of 2014. There are 67 days left in the year.

Highlight in History:

On Oct. 25, 1954, a meeting of President Dwight D. Eisenhower's Cabinet was broadcast live on radio and television; during the session, Secretary of State John Foster Dulles, just returned from Europe, reported on agreements signed in Paris on the future of West Germany. (To date, it's the only presidential Cabinet meeting to be carried on radio and TV.)

On this date:

In 1760, Britain's King George III succeeded his late grandfather, George II.

In 1929, former Interior Secretary Albert B. Fall was convicted in Washington, D.C., of accepting a $100,000 bribe from oil tycoon Edward L. Doheny. (Fall was sentenced to a year in prison and fined $100,000; he ended up serving nine months.)

In 1945, Taiwan became independent of Japanese colonial rule.

In 1962, U.N. Ambassador Adlai E. Stevenson II demanded that Soviet Ambassador Valerian Zorin confirm or deny the existence of Soviet-built missile bases in Cuba, saying he was prepared to wait "until hell freezes over" for an answer. Stevenson then presented photographic evidence of the bases to the Security Council.

Suspect confesses to robberies

ST. JOSEPH — A man who was arrested on a drug charge earlier this week might also have been involved in three armed robberies in the area earlier this month, police said.

The Berrien County Sheriff's Department said the man, 53, lives in Royalton Township and was arrested early Tuesday after a home invasion at 706 Vine St. in St. Joseph. He was not found at the home invasion scene but was found later that morning and taken to jail on an unrelated drug charge.

During questioning, the man admitted to three recent gas station/convenience store robberies and the home invasion, police said.

A report will be sent to the Berrien County Prosecutor's Office for review and charges, and the man's name will be released after he is arraigned.

Sheriff's deputies said police from Benton Township, St. Joseph and St. Joseph Township worked together with county deputies to solve the armed robberies and home invasion.

Gunman in Canada attack complained about mosque

By RACHEL LA CORTE
Associated Press

VANCOUVER, British Columbia — The gunman who shot and killed a soldier in plain daylight then stormed Canada's Parliament once complained that a Vancouver mosque he attended was too liberal and inclusive, and was kicked out after he repeatedly spent the night there even though officials told him to stop, Muslim leaders said Friday.

Aasim Rashid, spokesman for the British Columbia Muslim Association, said Michael Zehaf-Bibeau visited the Masjid Al-Salaam mosque for three to four months toward the end of 2011, and possibly early 2012, before he was told not to come back.

Rashid said that before Zehaf-Bibeau got in trouble for using the mosque for accommodations, he had complained to leaders in the previous administration about the mosque's openness and willingness to let non-Muslims visit.

"The mosque administration sat him down and explained to him that this is how they run the mosque and that they will keep the doors open to all Muslims and non-Muslims who want to visit," he said at a news conference held at the mosque Friday.

Rashid said that Zehaf-Bibeau was told he should go pray at a different mosque if he disagreed. However, he stayed until he was ultimately asked to leave when officials learned he was still sleeping in the mosque while battling legal troubles.

After the second or third time, he was told to leave the premises and "not to come back," Rashid said.

"This was the last interaction that the people of the mosque here have had with him," he said.

Zehaf-Bibeau, 32, shot a soldier to death at Canada's national war memorial Wednesday, and was eventually gunned down inside Parliament by the sergeant-at-arms.

His motive remains unknown, but Prime Minister Stephen Harper has called the shooting a terror attack, and the bloodshed raised fears that Canada is suffering reprisals for joining the U.S.-led air campaign against Islamic State extremists in Iraq and Syria

The Royal Canadian Mounted Police released two photos of Zehaf-Bibeau on Friday evening in an effort to elicit information from the public. One is of the car he used in the attack and the other is mug shot taken by Vancouver police. Police say they are particularly interested in information from his time in Ottawa from Oct. 2.

The attack in Ottawa came two days after a man described as an "ISIL-inspired terrorist" ran over two soldiers in a parking lot in Quebec, killing one and injuring the other before being shot to death by police. The man had been under surveillance by Canadian authorities, who feared he had jihadist ambitions and seized his passport when he tried to travel to Turkey.

Rashid said the Muslim association has been working on a preventive program that focuses on minimizing the effect of terrorist and criminal propaganda in Canada. He decried the recent violence.

"These are acts of criminal violence and show utter disregard for human life and the laws of the world as well as its religions," he said. "We openly denounce the propaganda of the lawless groups trying to incite Canadians to hurt other Canadians."

In July, another man who attended the Masjid Al-Salaam mosque, 25-year-old Hasibullah Yusufzai, was charged under a new anti-terrorism law for allegedly leaving the country to join Islamist fighters in Syria. Yusufzai is believed to have left Canada in January.

Rashid said Yusufzai attended the mosque two or three years ago.

"We do know that at some point he was asked to leave this mosque because of certain views he was expressing," he said.

While he was living in Vancouver in 2011, Zehaf-Bibeau was arrested on a robbery charge. During a court-ordered psychological evaluation, he said he committed the crime for the sole purpose of getting incarcerated. An evaluation said Zehaf-Bibeau believed jail was the only way to overcome a crack addiction and that as a devoted Muslim, he thought prison time was a way to pay for his mistakes.

Unlike the attacker in the Quebec case, Zehaf-Bibeau was not being watched by authorities. But a top police official said Zehaf-Bibeau – whose father was from Libya – may have lashed out in frustration over delays in getting his passport.

Bob Paulson, commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, said the police commissioner said Zehaf-Bibeau's email was found on the hard drive of someone charged with a terrorist-related offense. He didn't say who and described the connection as tenuous.

Zehaf-Bibeau's passport had not been revoked or his application rejected, but authorities were still investigating whether to grant him one, Paulson said. The wait appeared to weigh heavily on Zehalf-Bibeau.

Abubakir Abdelkareem, who often visited the Ottawa Mission, a homeless shelter downtown where Zehaf-Bibeau stayed in recent weeks, said Zehaf-Bibeau told him he had had a drug problem but had been clean for three months and was trying to steer clear of temptation by going to Libya.

he donated the money. He said the donor became concerned when he found out – so he called Upton. He said Upton was very gracious and understanding when he was contacted.

"The way the interactions have been described in the media have been wrong from our perspective," said the adviser, who asked not to be identified.

The adviser said Upton is known as someone who will reach across the aisle in a bipartisan way.

"If you're going to get campaign finance reform legislation passed, you're going to need people like Upton to enact that," he said.

Wilbur said it's been frustrating because the Huffington Post article doesn't name its sources for the story to back up its allegations that Upton or Andres have done anything unethical.

"Fred has one of the most sterling reputations in Congress," Wilbur said. "...And now, two weeks before an election, brutal accusations are flying. Something doesn't add up."

state's fiscal situation keeps getting better, she said. The Legislature is delivering sound budgets on time, a contrast to the days preceding Gov. Rick Snyder's 2010 election.

"I feel like this governor has done a lot to address those long-term liabilities," she said, noting the state's improved bond rating.

She said the governor and Legislature often fail to get credit for the good they have done. They have found $1 billion to shore up the teachers' retirement system, which gives schools district more money for classrooms.

Pressure for road improvements is coming from business and labor, but anti-tax sentiment remains potent.

Still, Schuitmaker said, "I feel very confident that we will have a solution for roads."

She said she's passionate about constituents services, taking 30-60 requests per week. She said she works about 50 hours per week.

"I can't please everyone, but certainly I get very few complaints" about services, she said.

She said she has enjoyed wide support for supporting the controversial right-to-work legislation in 2012, though she said she doesn't hear often from union members. She said those she spoke with are divided about the law.

Schuitmaker, a lawyer, is married to Steve Mucci, and they have two children. She graduated from Mattawan High School, Michigan State University and the Detroit School of Law.

Walters, 71, is a retired aerospace engineer. He and his wife, Barbara, have two sons and five grandchildren. The Downriver Detroit native is a graduate of the University of Michigan.

Walters said he is troubled by the trends working against Michigan's working and middle classes and poor.

Schuitmaker has "done a lot of things that degraded our middle class," Walters said in a phone interview. "My overall feeling is she is working for corporate interests."

He cites her support for right-to-work, which outlaws paying union dues as an employment condition.

"The 10 poorest states are right-to-work," he said.

He said Republicans in Lansing are shifting tax burdens from the well-off to workers and the poor. Most notably, the pension tax on senior citizens and reductions in the Earned Income Tax Credit.

Furthermore, he said, high-profit companies lower labor costs by shifting expenses onto taxpayers. In other words, food stamps have become a corporate subsidy.

State Republicans "seem to think it's good for our state to keep driving wages down," he said.

The Legislature passed a minimum wage hike this year to $8.15 per hour. But Walters said the vote was more about undermining a referendum effort that would have led to $10.10, something closer to a living wage.

Berrien County and a part of Cass County. The 79th covers northern Berrien County.

Pagel said it's nice to not have to campaign vigorously. He had a convincing victory over challenger Jim Walker in the August primary. Pagel said he plans to run a few ads before the Nov. 4 election.

Pagel credits his electoral success to getting broad-based support from voters and not being an easy target for opponents.

"I'm more moderate," he said. "Unions haven't formally given me their support, but they know they can talk to me."

He said his plans for a second term include taking more of a leadership role and getting more involved in education. Pagel spent 14 years as president of the Berrien Springs Board of Education before moving on to four years on the Berrien County Board of Commissioners and two years as a state representative.

His other goals include being appointed to the House Appropriations and Education committees, addressing the need for more road funding and doing something to address increases in no-fault car insurance costs.

Pagel said his lack of an active Democratic challenger might be because Democratic Party officials look to put more effort into races where they have a better chance of winning.

"In some districts, the Democrats are fighting very, very hard, maybe they're picking their battles," he said.

Kiekenapp throws for 473 yards as Panthers clinch SAC South title

WATERVLIET — Watervliet quarterback Blake Kiekenapp threw for so many yards Friday that even he was surprised.

Watervliet 35 Lawton 7

Kiekenapp had 473 yards passing as Watervliet defeated Lawton 35-7 to clinch the Southwestern Athletic Conference South Division title.

"That's astonishing to me," Kiekenapp said when informed of his passing yardage. "I had no idea I had that many. I figured it might be in the 300s. That's great. My line gave me so much time, the receivers ran hard routes, we were just clicking on all cylinders tonight."

Watervliet (4-0 SAC South, 8-1) won its second straight division title and fourth in the past six seasons.

"It feels awesome," Watervliet coach Jeremy Andrews said. "Obviously that was our goal from the get-go here, to make sure that championship stayed in Watervliet, and we achieved it so we're feeling pretty good right now."

Lawton (2-2, 5-4) got off to a good start when Jarod Wimes ran the opening kickoff back 61 yards to the Watervliet 32. The Blue Devils eventually reached the 1-yard line, but were stopped on fourth down.

"Early momentum, especially as the underdog, would've been very huge," Lawton co-coach Tony Karsen said. "We had

Spartans hope to keep up trend

Dantonio, No. 8 MSU has beaten Michigan in 5 of last 6 meetings

By NOAH TRISTER
AP Sports Writer

EAST LANSING — Michigan State coach Mark Dantonio refused to admit this week that his team has dominated its rivalry with Michigan lately.

In fact, the Spartans' leader wouldn't even acknowledge that Michigan State dominated last year's meeting, when the Wolverines finished with minus-48 yards rushing in a 29-6 loss.

Dantonio chose his words carefully, but his message was clear: No matter how many times the Spartans batter their in-state rivals, it will never be enough.

"When stakes are at their highest you want to be as competitive as you can. I think that's human nature. That's what we do," Dantonio said. "We're not going to allow the opportunity to slip by and go through something nonchalant."

The eighth-ranked Spartans host Michigan today, having won five of their last six meetings with the Wolverines. Michigan State is heavily favored in this one against a Michigan team that seemed to be in disarray before a win over Penn State two weekends ago.

For the Wolverines, there is still time to revive this season — and a win over Michigan State would be quite a start. With a spot in college football's playoff still a possibility, the Spartans (6-1, 3-0 Big Ten) will be under a decent amount of pressure, knowing a slip-up against an apparently overmatched rival would be unusually painful.

"I mean, it's a rivalry game," Michigan State defensive end Marcus Rush said. "The day after last year's game, as soon as that game is over, you're already ready to play them again. So it's a year-round thing, and everyone's fired up."

The Wolverines (3-4, 1-2) will try to do a better job dealing with Michigan State's physicality than in last season's loss. Michigan was 6-1 heading into that game before losing five of six to finish the season. This year has not been any better.

Meanwhile, the Spartans ended up going unbeaten in the Big Ten in 2013 and then won the Rose Bowl, leaving little doubt about their superiority within their home state. That's a reality Michigan is hoping to change.

"I like how our guys have prepared. I've said that every week. I like how they have prepared," Wolverines coach Brady Hoke said. "They are a hard-working bunch, and they haven't disappointed in any of those things. I know that we will be ready to go play on Saturday."

Here are a few things to watch when the Wolverines try to upset the Spartans:

Lancers win SMAC West

Lakeshore easily beats Niles, finishes regular season 7-2

NILES — In the aftermath of Friday's game, Lakeshore players and coaches were busy either posing for pictures or finding someone, anyone to celebrate with. But running back Sam Effa stood alone taking in the moment.

Lakeshore 42 Niles 7

The Lancers, minutes removed from a 42-7 win over Niles, had just clinched the Southwestern Michigan Athletic Conference West Division title.

"It's hard to describe. None of us have ever been close to a conference title," Effa said. "Just standing here seeing everyone so happy, so proud. This is what really makes it worth it."

The Lancers wanted no part of possibly sharing the conference title.

Lakeshore controlled time of possession, dominated the turnover margin and put an exclamation mark on its first conference title since 2012.

"We really wanted that SMAC title without having to share it, so the kids really played hard," said first-year Lakeshore coach Bryan Keim. "I think Chayse (Magrane) did a really good job from the quarterback spot, he was really in control. But the whole team did a great job tonight, really proud of them."

In a game where both teams had something at stake, Lakeshore took control from the start and never let go.

Lakeshore (5-0 SMAC West, 7-2) methodically drove 70 yards on nine plays, taking up 4:40 on the clock on its first possession.

Effa, who ran for 105 yards on 21 carries, finished the tone-setting opening drive with a 3-yard touchdown run.

Fourteen seconds later, Magrane scored on a 14-yard keeper to put

But a 46-yard scoring strike with just under a minute to play propelled the Mustangs to a thrilling 21-14 victory before a sparse crowd at Dickinson Stadium.

"I thought if we could get the ball back we could set Cullen (Hoffman) up for a kick (field goal)," stated Bears coach Gandalf Church, whose squad's season ended with a disappointing 4-5 record (2-3 in the SMAC West). "Give them credit, they were able to run that spread effectively there at the end. They made the big play at a big time."

Shamrocks shut out Chieftains, earn playoff berth

BERRIEN SPRINGS — With a playoff berth hanging in the balance, the Berrien Springs defense came through to preserve a 7-0 victory over Dowagiac on Friday.

Berrien Springs 7 Dowagiac 0

The Shamrocks appeared to give up a crucial fourth-down pass to give Dowagaic a first down late in the fourth quarter Friday night. But the Chieftains were called for offensive pass interference on the play, backing them up to midfield and on the next play, the Shamrocks defense stiffened one last time.

With the win, Berrien Springs clinched a playoff berth for the first time since 2011.

"This is the best feeling ever," said Berrien Springs senior quarterback Johnie Boone, who led the Shamrocks with 92 yards throwing and 46 yards rushing. "This is our first winning season as a unit. It's pretty impressive."

The lone offensive highlight of the night came on the opening drive of the game. Berrien Springs quickly marched 44 yards on six plays to take the early lead. Senior running back Malik McIntyre capped the drive with a 3-yard touchdown run.

Dowagiac's last drive took a strange turn. The Chieftains were faced with a second-and-17 from their own 8-yard line. Senior quarterback Bryce Dodd overthrew an open receiver but, like something straight out of a television commercial, one of the sprinklers inadvertently turned on, causing a redo on the play.

"I have no idea what happened on that play," said Berrien Springs coach Bill Bergan. "It of course happened to be a play they ran to that side so they got to replay the down. It just seemed like tonight whatever could go wrong did, except for the scoreboard."

Dodd then hit junior receiver Logan Eby for a 34-yard pass play to seemingly give Dowagaic momentum, but the Shamrocks defense, as it had done all night long, closed the door.

Royals beat Giants 3-2 for Series lead

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Jeremy Guthrie pitched shutout ball into the sixth inning, Lorenzo Cain drove in an early run off Tim Hudson and made a pair of nifty catches, and the Kansas City Royals beat the San Francisco Giants 3-2 Friday night to take a 2-1 World Series lead.

Cain's RBI groundout three batters in put the Royals ahead, and Kansas City expanded its lead to 3-0 in the sixth when Alex Gordon hit an RBI double off Cain and scored on Eric Hosmer's single off left-hander Javier Lopez.

San Francisco finally got to Guthrie in the bottom of the sixth when pinch-hitter Michael Morse hit an RBI double over third base just past the glove of a diving Michael Moustakas and scored on Buster Posey's groundout against Kelvin Herrera.

Bears' Briggs doubtful with injury

LAKE FOREST, Ill. (AP) — Chicago Bears linebacker Lance Briggs will likely miss his third straight game because of a rib injury.

The seven-time Pro Bowl player is listed as doubtful for Sunday's game at New England.

missed opportunities."

Watervliet didn't get on the board until the 9:37 mark of the second quarter, when Kyler Kiekenapp took a short pass from his brother and turned it into a 49-yard touchdown.

Kyler Kiekenapp led Watervliet receivers with six catches for 176 yards. Tyler Loomis added nine receptions for 139 yards.

"(Lawton) plays with no safety," Andrews said. "If you're going to bring everybody up like that, Blake's a good thrower, he'll make you pay. Our receivers are good, we ran some great routes tonight."

Watervliet's second score came quickly after its first. One play after Weston DeHaven stripped the ball from Lawton quarterback George Gilley on a sack, Garrison Muth caught a 52-yard touchdown pass.

Muth finished with 12 carries for 86 yards and four receptions for 88 yards. Watervliet outgained Lawton 581-109.

"From the beginning of the season, we started off a little slow," Blake Kiekenapp said. "The first couple weeks we were slow. New receivers, new linemen, and myself included... it took a little bit for us to get going, but we're showing what we can do when we're really clicking on all cylinders. It's hard to stop us."

Watervliet went on to score on its first three drives of the second half to put the game safely out of reach. Lawton's only score came in the fourth quarter on a 35-yard interception return by Derek Leighton.

The Blue Devils had a net loss of four yards rushing. Watervliet had seven sacks, including four by Chad Mason, and got interceptions from David Curl and Carlos Hernandez.

"Our defensive line is spectacular," Andrews said. "We have four really good football players down there. Anyone who knows football knows if you win down there, you're going to be in pretty good shape."

Shamrocks

The Shamrocks (4-1 Wolverine West, 6-3) held Dowagiac to 152 yards of offense, including 74 rushing yards on 34 carries.

"Dowagiac moved the ball between the 20s at will, and then we just stiffened up and got big plays," said Bergan.

"We tried to get rid of the ball quicker, but we didn't have time for our play-action to develop," Dowagaic coach Mike Stranger said. "They came with a lot of pressure and that took part of our game away. Whenever you're second-and-17 or 18 it's hard to come back from that."

"They stepped up big time," Boone said of his defense. "I'm really proud of them."

Berrien Springs got four sacks and five tackles for loss. Senior defensive lineman Ethan Rogers led the Shamrocks with two sacks.

"Everybody who needed to stood up on defense," Bergan said. "I can't single out one player, they all did great."

"We just worked hard, wrapped up, and hit low," said senior defensive lineman Matthew Smith, who had several tackles for loss. "We did good but now we've gotta get ready for next week."

The drive of the night for the Berrien Springs offense came with two minutes left in the third quarter and started at the Shamrock 1-yard line.

After holding the ball for a mere 1:29 on its previous two drives of the half, Berrien Springs looked to be in trouble after a perfect punt pinned the Shamrocks on their own goal line. But Boone calmly hit fellow senior running back Deonte Campbell-Sims for a big 17-yard gain on a crucial third-and-four to give the Shamrocks some breathing room.

"That wasn't a great throw on my part," Boone said. "I normally don't like to hang my receivers out there like that, but with the playoffs on the line sometimes you've gotta have players make plays."

"Right before the play I just prayed to God to give me the strength to make that play," Campbell-Sims said.

The defense for Dowagiac (1-4, 3-6) also had a good night, giving up only 191 yards of offense and forced the game's only turnover. That turnover was a fumble recovered by senior linebacker Caleb Sands on Berrien Springs' opening possession of the second half. It gave the Chieftains their best starting field position of the game at the Shamrock 23-yard line.

"Our defense played very well. They flew around and played really well," Stranger said. "They stepped up. They created chances, we just didn't capitalize on offense."

Berrien Springs' defense held up on the ensuing drive, not allowing a first down, and actually pushed Dowagiac back five yards before getting the ball back on downs.

Berrien Springs will find out Sunday night who its first playoff game will be against.

"I think we'll get either Hopkins or Grand Rapids West Catholic," Bergan said. "Whoever we get they'll be tough to play."

PGA ousts Bishop as president

Sexist social media comments cited as reason for removal

By DOUG FERGUSON
AP Golf Writer

Ted Bishop was ousted Friday as president of the PGA of America over a sexist tweet and Facebook post directed at Ian Poulter.

Bishop was irritated by remarks Poulter made in his book on the Ryder Cup captaincy of Nick Faldo in 2008 and Tom Watson this year. He referred to Poulter as "Lil Girl" on Twitter when stacking up Poulter's feats next to Faldo. In a Facebook post, he noted that Watson (with eight majors) and Faldo (with six majors and the Ryder Cup record for most points) were getting "bashed" by Poulter.

"Really? Sounds like a little school girl squealing during recess. C'MON MAN!" he wrote.

The PGA of America board voted Friday to remove him, meaning Bishop will not be invited to future PGA Championships and Ryder Cups, or any other courtesies extended to past presidents.

He is the first PGA president to be ousted. Bishop had one month left on his two-year term.

Bishop, who has two daughters, apologized to Poulter and "anyone else I might have offended" in a statement he sent to The Associated Press.

But the head pro from Indiana went down swinging.

Bishop said his fellow PGA officers asked him to resign Friday and he refused, wanting instead to apologize in person to the board and let the process run its course.

"The board heard me out and then voted to impeach me," he said. "That is the due process and I respect that, as painful as it might be."

In removing Bishop as president, the PGA of America board said the remarks were inconsistent with association's policies.

"The PGA of America understands the enormous responsibility it has to lead this great game and to enrich lives in our society through golf," PGA chief executive Pete Bevacqua said in a statement. "We must demand of ourselves that we make golf both welcoming and inclusive to all who want to experience it, and everyone at the PGA of America must lead by example."

The PGA of America has 27,000 members, about 1,100 of them women. Bevacqua said in a telephone interview that he received "a lot of negative feedback from all types of sources, internal and external." He declined to specify whether PGA female members were part of that.

Bishop was irritated by comments Poulter made in his book released this week about the Ryder Cup captaincy of Faldo in 2008 and Watson this year at Gleneagles. Bishop was with Faldo at The Greenbrier on Thursday when he tweeted to Poulter, "Faldo's record stands by itself. Six majors and all-time RC points. Yours vs. His? Lil Girl."

Bishop's boldest move as president was to pick Watson as the U.S. captain, saying he was tired of the Americans losing. But the move backfired when Watson's heavy-handed style didn't mesh with a younger generation. Watson, 65, was the oldest captain in Ryder Cup history.

score tied a 14-14, Central quarterback Sam VerMeulen connected on a deep pass over the middle to Patrick Rohs for the game winner.

"After their (the Mustangs') first drive we stoned them on defense, other than that short TD drive we gave up to end the first half," noted Church, who played a number of underclassmen at the skill positions, including sophomore quarterback Griffin Beaudette. "The kids competed and I'm proud of that.

"But we're not into moral victories. That's not what this program is all about. A 4-5 record is not up to our standards," continued Church. "We'll meet on Tuesday, say goodbye to our seniors, then have our first team meeting to address the problems that created this (losing season) and get it fixed."

Portage Central (4-1 SMAC West, 7-1) scored on its first possession, driving 74 yards in nine plays capped by a 2-yard run by Paul Lewis. A key play in the drive was a 51-yard scamper by Brandon Sturgeon, who ended the night with 152 yards on 16 carries.

The Mustangs went up 14-0 with five seconds left in the half on a 12-yard keeper by VerMeulen.

But the Bears tallied in the third when Beaudette, who completed 14 of 22 aerials for 135 yards and two TDs, connected on a 27-yard scoring strike to senior Hunter Waning who made a tough, leaping catch between two Mustang defenders and rumbled the final 15 yards to pay dirt.

The Bears then tied it at 14 when junior Sammy McCoy plowed in from the 1-yard-line with 4:08 remaining. The TD capped a 9-play, 28-yard drive following a short Central punt.

After both teams traded possessions, the Mustangs covered 83 yards in just six plays to win it. Central's three first downs in that final drive were its only ones of the second half.

It was the 55th meeting of the two old football rivals. St. Joseph still holds a 59-56 edge in the series.

Hoffman, ended his senior season with nine field goals made, tying the single season school record for the second straight season set by former University of Michigan kicker Mike Gillette in 1984.

Lakeshore up two scores.

The quick touchdown was setup by the first of seven Niles turnovers – this one, a fumbled snap on the Vikings' first play from scrimmage.

"We have been use to turning it over, so it feels good to have it the other way around," Effa said. "Defense did a great job tonight."

Niles (2-3, 5-4) responded with an 80-yard Joseph Avance run to cut the Lancer lead to seven, but that would be the Vikings' only score.

Effa and Magrane each scored another rushing touchdown in the second quarter to put Lakeshore ahead 28-7 at the half.

Magrane added a third rushing touchdown in the third quarter and a passing touchdown to Andrew Branch in the fourth.

Magrane finished with 125 total yards of offense and four touchdowns.

"I think we are a good team when we play our game," Magrane said. "If we're not turning the ball over, I think we are tough to stop."

For Niles, it finishes with its first winning record in 11 seasons but will likely find itself out of the playoffs.

The Vikings committed seven turnovers in the loss, four inside Lakeshore territory.

"They are 16-, 17-, 18-year-old kids and, unfortunately, sometimes that happens," Niles coach Antwon Jones said. "But I am proud of them. It is what it is."

RIVALRY

but now the Spartans are a much more balanced group. Connor Cook is second in the Big Ten in passing efficiency, and Michigan State leads the league in scoring.

Michigan, on the other hand, is dead last in the Big Ten in total offense.

RECEIVING THREATS: Michigan State's Tony Lippett is averaging a conference-high 112 yards receiving per game, and Michigan receiver Devin Funchess is considered a top NFL prospect.

Funchess has been hobbled a bit this season, but the Wolverines could use a big play or two against Michigan State's aggressive defense.

PROTECTION: Michigan State's seven sacks were a major reason why Michigan's rushing numbers were so awful in last year's matchup, and the Spartans also sacked the Wolverines seven times in 2011.

Michigan's offense has bogged down this season against decent competition, and if the Wolverines can't keep quarterback Devin Gardner upright, it will probably be more of the same against the Spartans.

SMASH-MOUTH: Michigan held Penn State to 65 yards in the second half, and the Wolverines were impressive against the run for much of that game. Controlling the line of scrimmage is a huge priority against the Spartans.

The team with more yards rushing has won 41 of the last 44 games in the Michigan-Michigan State series.

Proper hygiene protects against urinary infections

DEAR DOCTOR K: I think my 4-year-old daughter may have a urinary tract infection. How will it be treated? And what can I do to make sure she doesn't get another one?

DEAR READER: A urinary tract infection (UTI) occurs when bacteria infect urine in the kidneys, bladder or urethra, a small tube that connects the bladder to the outside.

In girls (and women), the urethra is located in front of the vagina. The opening of the urethra is also near the rectum. The large intestine (the colon and rectum) are filled with bacteria. During bowel movements, those bacteria start living on the skin around the rectum and near the urethra. If those bacteria get into the urethra, they can move up into the bladder. From there, they can move into the kidneys. This is what causes a UTI.

Some girls and women have a tendency to get repeated UTIs. One reason is that some women inherit a tendency to have bacteria stick more easily to the cells of their urinary tract.

UTIs can cause fever, pain with urination, back pain and stomach pain. Repeated UTIs over months and years can cause kidney damage, particularly if they are not treated promptly.

To check for a UTI, your daughter's doctor will take her temperature because UTIs often cause fever. The doctor will also examine her. A UTI can cause tenderness in the lower part of the belly (where the bladder is) or in the lower back (where the kidneys are). He or she will also test your child's urine for infection.

Dr. Anthony Komaroff

If your daughter does have a UTI, the doctor will prescribe an antibiotic. Make sure your daughter takes her antibiotic exactly as directed. She should finish the entire course of antibiotics, even if she starts to feel much better after the first several pills. If the antibiotic is stopped too soon, the UTI can return.

Over-the-counter medications such as acetaminophen (Tylenol) or ibuprofen (Advil, Motrin) may help relieve pain and fever. (Never give a child aspirin or any products containing aspirin.)

Drinking lots of liquids will help clear the infection and prevent dehydration – when children develop high fevers, the sweating can cause serious dehydration. Applying a heating pad or warm compress to your daughter's belly or lower back may help relieve discomfort.

UTIs are painful and uncomfortable. To prevent another one:

- Make sure your daughter drinks enough fluids and urinates regularly.
- Avoid bubble baths and strong soaps that could irritate the genital area. This is especially true before puberty.
- Teach your daughter to wipe herself only from front to back, especially after bowel movements. Wiping from back to front moves bacteria to the skin around the opening of the urethra.
- Have your daughter wear cotton underwear, not nylon or other fabrics. Cotton allows air to circulate more freely, which helps prevent bacteria from growing.

There is no perfect protection against getting urinary tract infections, but these measures will help reduce the risk.

Occasional hookups keep flame alive for 10 years

DEAR ABBY: I have known "Justin" for 10 years. I'm very interested in him. I'm sure he knows it, but we have never talked about it. Once in a blue moon we "hook up," and I'm usually the one to set the date up.

We're friends on social media, but weeks – even months – can pass without our speaking to each other. Justin and I have no mutual friends, so I can't "accidentally" bump into him at gatherings or anything like that.

I honestly don't mind hooking up with him because he's the only one I do that with. But it does hurt when I don't hear from him afterward. What should I do? It's obvious I'm head over heels for him – he can't be that blind! – Plain Jane in Stockton, Calif.

DEAR JANE: If Justin was interested in more than an occasional hookup, he'd be the one calling you, and it wouldn't be once in a blue moon. Ten years is long enough to chase an emotionally unavailable man. If this was meant to be, it would have already happened, and you'd be more than friends on social media.

DEAR ABBY: I'll be 30 soon. My friends and I have drifted apart because we're all in different stages of our lives. Some of us still frequent the bar scene, others have gotten married or dropped off the radar. My closest friend is so wrapped up in "mommy blogs" and all things "baby" that she's no longer able to discuss much else.

Jeanne Phillips

Dear Abby

I don't have children, and I'm tired of going to bars. I'm in a happy, committed relationship, but neither of us wants to focus on marriage for a few years. How do people connect with others at this stage of the game? – Friendless In New Jersey

DEAR FRIENDLESS: One way is to expand your interests. You and your boyfriend should join groups and meet people with whom you'll have some things in common.

If you're interested in politics, the next two years should give you plenty of opportunity to meet new people. Volunteering is another way to expand your circle of acquaintances. While you won't make dear friends overnight – friendships usually take a while to grow – the more people you meet, the greater your chances will be of developing meaningful relationships.

DEAR ABBY: I am a 20-year-old college student who is a virgin. I think this is the time to date people and get a better understanding of who I am and what I like in men. When I tell guys I'm a virgin, they don't want to talk to me anymore. When is the best time to bring it up, and how do I do that in conversation? – Diamond In The East

DEAR DIAMOND: You may be jumping the gun and announcing your status prematurely. The subject of one's virginity – or lack thereof – is relevant at the time when there's a reason to anticipate there will be intimacy in a couple's relationship.

Bridge

Bob Uecker, who won the 1964 World Series with the St. Louis Cardinals, said, "I hit a grand slam off Ron Herbel and when his manager, Herman Franks, came out to get him, he was bringing Herbel's suitcase."

To end the week, let's look at a grand slam in which it would be easy for declarer to go down.

How should South play in seven hearts after West leads the diamond queen?

Many Wests these days, despite the unfavorable vulnerability, would have used the Unusual No-trump, jumping to two no-trump over one heart to describe their minor two-suiter.

North used a strong jump shift, showing an excellent spade one-suiter or a good spade-heart two-suiter with, typically, 13-16 high-card points -- enough to insist on game, but leaving a slam move to partner.

Declarer seems to have 14(!) tricks: five spades, seven hearts, one diamond and one club. There is a natural reaction for South to win the first trick with dummy's diamond ace and to discard his club five. But then the apparent home-run ball is caught by an outfielder when the spades break 4-0.

South has two other choices at trick one. He can pitch a spade on the diamond ace. Then he can draw trumps and establish dummy's fifth spade by ruffing the fourth round in his hand. He would return to dummy with a trump and throw his club five on the spade eight.

Alternatively, I like to ruff at trick one, draw trumps and turn to spades.

When declarer sees the bad break, he knows to jettison a spade on the diamond ace.

Children are a key to a healthy church

George Lawton
Insights

I've been thinking about children lately. Maybe this was caused by meeting our first great-granddaughter a few days ago. We have three great-grandsons, but she is the first girl. And then we learned that we have another great-grandchild on the way. Or maybe it's the result of preaching about Abraham and Sarah and Isaac and Hagar and Ishmael, thinking about the problems that divided loyalties cause.

The Scriptures are filled with references to children. One of my favorite references is Psalm 127 where children are compared to arrows saying, "Blessed is the man whose quiver is full of them." Who can forget King David's anguished cry, "Oh my son Absalom! My son, my son Absalom! If only I had died instead of you!" (2 Sam. 18:33). And who identifies with the vengeful spirit of Sarah when she orders Abraham, "Get rid of that slave woman and her son," sending Hagar and Ishmael out into the trackless desert (Genesis 21:10)? Children can cause us to do things we might not otherwise do.

Nearly all the books of the Bible mentioned children, sometimes celebrating them with great joy and sometimes describing the destructive and evil things that can happen to them. Whether in ancient times or today, children formed the center of family life.

One of the favorite verses in the Gospels for many people is Mark 10:14, "Let the little children come to me, and do not hinder them." We need children around us to remind us that God has great things in store for those who come with the faith of children. And that is one of our problems today. Children have become less of a factor in too many churches.

One of the surest signs of the problem of Christianity in America is the decline of the Sunday school movement. Any of us who are more than 50 years old can remember when our churches had booming Sunday schools. Now, in many churches, they are not booming. In fact, Sunday school may not exist at all. The decline is amply illustrated by data from United Methodist churches over the past 20 years. In 1994, the average attendance, for all ages, in the approximately 65 UM churches in Southwest Michigan was 3,571. In 2013, it was 1,513.

If you attend a church with a vital Sunday school, you probably should see if there is something you can do to keep it succeeding. If your church, like mine, has no children's program, you probably should be mourning the loss of that vital element. If there are few or no children to educate, there are probably few or no young families to become disciples. Simply put, a church without growing disciples is a church that is fading from the scene.

Methodist panel hears appeal over pastor's officiation of gay wedding

By TRAVIS LOLLER
Associated Press.

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — A Methodist pastor who was disciplined for officiating at his son's same-sex wedding will soon find out whether he can remain an ordained minister in the nation's second-largest Protestant denomination.

The Rev. Frank Schaefer was suspended and then defrocked last year after refusing to promise to refrain from conducting same-sex marriages in the future. The action against Schaefer – who officiated at his son's 2007 wedding in Massachusetts – was taken after a church trial in Pennsylvania.

An appeals panel restored Schaefer's pastoral credentials in June, but that decision is being challenged. The United Methodist Church's Judicial Council, the denomination's highest judicial body, heard arguments in the case Wednesday in Memphis.

The Rev. Scott Campbell, who represents Schaefer, told the council that Schaefer's defrocking was wrongly imposed as a punishment for a possible future action, something church rules do not allow.

The Rev. Christopher Fisher, representing the Eastern Pennsylvania Annual Conference, said the punishment was appropriately directed at Schaefer's refusal to promise that he would uphold the Methodist law book in its entirety, "the same condition required of every United Methodist elder," Fisher said.

The United Methodist Church accepts gay and lesbian members but rejects homosexuality as "incompatible with Christian teaching," and clergy who perform same-sex unions risk punishment ranging from a reprimand to suspension to defrocking.

Just before the Wednesday hearing, a group of about 50 of Schaefer's supporters, some coming from as far away as Oklahoma and Maryland, met in a downtown Memphis park to worship together. The group, wearing short rainbow-colored stoles, then walked together to the hearing and sat in the audience.

The Judicial Council is not expected to announce a decision until several days after its meeting concludes today. Its decisions are final.

In an interview, the 52-year-old Schaeffer, who has been a minister for 21 years, said he was devastated when his ministerial credentials were taken away last December, but "so many good things" have come out of it.

Schaefer has been traveling the country giving talks and sermons on gay acceptance. And last month, he released a book about his experience.

HOROSCOPE

By EUGENIA LAST

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 25

It's time to shake things up. Take a different approach to your goals and see what happens. Trust your intuition and go after whatever it is you are trying to achieve. Your intelligence, determination and confidence will ensure that you reach your destination successfully.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Don't allow anyone to put restrictions on you. It will be obvious to everyone that you mean business if you are firm and forthright. Be strong, and rewards will be yours.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Stop letting old ideas and negativity hold you back. Tie up loose ends and give yourself a chance to move forward unencumbered by past mistakes and disappointments.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) You will be surrounded by negative opinions. Your creativity and ingenuity will help you find a way around any obstacles you encounter. A successful outcome will show everyone how astute you are.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Stand your ground if anyone tries to stymie your plans. It's your future, and you have a right to choose your direction. Exercise your right to have a voice and an opinion.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) A financial or legal matter requires attention. Don't be deterred by friends or colleagues who try to change your mind. You know what's right and best for you.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Money matters look favorable. If a partnership isn't running smoothly, it would be best to examine it carefully. Consider whether you want to pursue or walk away from someone you are questioning.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You can get your way and surpass opponents if you keep your emotions in check. You will be able to outmaneuver and outsmart anyone if you stick to the facts and remain calm.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Activities with youngsters will brighten your day. Don't be surprised if your current situation goes through an unexpected change. Finish any incomplete tasks that you've been avoiding.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) You can achieve greater popularity at a work or networking event. You will come up with original solutions to perplexing situations that will impress even your toughest skeptics.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Before you commit to purchasing property or a luxury item, check the fine print. Shop around for the best deal. You will be torn between two opposing ideas, so weigh the pros and cons.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Change your routine by making a point to do things differently. You will learn a lot from a friend, relative or co-worker regarding the best way to tackle your projects.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Don't be intimidated by someone with more experience than you. You are intelligent and intuitive, and a new opportunity is right around the corner. Don't back down; move forward.
